

I think putting a national price on carbon is key to solving climate change and the Energy Innovation Act does just that. Companies like Intel are making good strides and doing the right thing, but legislation or standards should be set to get this across all industries and companies.

It's great to see the legislature acknowledge the threat posed by climate change and the need for Congress to focus on enacting a bipartisan solution, and really do believe it should be bipartisan. Maybe some of the tax savings from tax reform which companies have gotten and is sure to be renegotiated should be put toward carbon offset funding.

Nice to see the OR legislature taking a lead here.
