

To Whom it May Concern;

I am writing in response to current legislative action and the fact that I am very concerned about climate change. I have two boys that will grow up in a majorly changing world, and my opinion is that we owe to our children to take decisive action swiftly.

Putting a price on carbon nationally is one of the best and practicable approaches to solving climate change and the Energy Innovation Act does just that. It is mandatory to do something swiftly and I fully support and congratulate the State's effort to encourage Congress to take bipartisan action. It's great to see the legislature acknowledge the threat posed by climate change and the need for Congress to focus on enacting a bipartisan solution.

Considering the divisiveness in politics I am in strong support of this effort, in particular I think that the Energy Innovation Act has the potential to be a solution that may overcome partisan hurdles.

What I like about the approach is that it puts a predictable price on carbon, uses the money to provide low and middle income families an economic boost, and it returns the money back to families so they have financial relief from an increasing price on carbon.

Please keep up your efforts, you have my full support in this matter!

Kind Regards
Jochen Wissmann