In 2019, the Oregon State Legislature passed House Bill (HB) 2625 directing the Oregon State Police conduct a study and report to the legislature with recommendations on how to increase criminal justice and investigative resources towards cases of missing and murdered Native American women in this state. A multi-disciplinary Missing and Murdered Native American Women Work Group (Work Group) was established with representatives from the Oregon State Legislature, federal, state, local, and tribal organizations.

Included in the 2020 Work Group report was a recommendation to “strengthen and create partnerships between law enforcement and Native American communities and continue outreach to all Native American communities in Oregon on the issue of Missing and Murdered Native American Women.” The Work Group report also identified certain barriers to investigations of missing and murdered Native American Women including that “Native American communities in Oregon indicated there is a lack of trust between their communities and government, including law enforcement. “ Oregon State Police, Report on Missing and Murdered Native American Women, Listening and Understanding Tour HB 2625, 1-2, (September 2020).

HB 4102 establishes the position of Tribal Relations Liaison within the Department of State Police to serve as the department contact person for all tribal governments and indigenous persons within this state. The measure also requires police officers and certified reserve officers be trained to investigate and report cases involving missing or murdered indigenous persons.
