

I voted in support of BM 110. Like many who supported this, we feel completely hoodwinked. We were under the impression that instead of people being diverted through jails for drug possession, they would be diverted to treatment. Nothing could be further from the truth. What a terrible joke this law is. No one is forced to do anything, and our law enforcement has given up. They can't be blamed. This law does not allow them to help anyone. Handing out meaningless citations helps no one.

Treatment must be required. It must be completed. Any deviation from these 2 facts must result in a journey through the criminal justice system. A limited number of attempts should be setup. Any more that this set limit must result in a journey through the criminal justice system.

Have we lost all common sense? Look at the situation on the streets and all around for the simple "Yes" answer.
