

Measure 110 is a net drain on life in Oregon. It is not compassionate for a government to facilitate open public drug use. The consequence of Measure 110 for law-abiding citizens is trudging through a society where it is harder by the day to justify staying. Oregon, Multnomah County, and the City of Portland are no longer holding up their end of the bargain in providing services in a civil society. When things go wrong for me, I have no recourse because my expectations for a normal life cannot supercede the never-ending parade of emergencies that require government agencies' immediate attention.

Measure 110 exacerbates the homeless issue that politicians say they want to curb. The public is on the verge of discovering the ties between Measure 110 and how it facilitates sex trafficking and an entire industry preying upon the state's most vulnerable. In a rush to out-liberal our neighbors, Oregon turned its back on civilised society. Please fix it. Don't bury your heads in the sand just to save face.

Kevin Lambert
Portland, OR