

Co-Chairs Lieber and Kropf, and Members of the Joint Interim Committee On Addiction and Community Safety Response,

I am as appalled as anyone by rampant public drug use, but recriminalization is not the answer.

I live next door to a house full of drug addicts (and their children). They're living there with no water or electricity. I think prison might be appropriate for some of them, but it would be much less expensive and more effective to provide treatment for the children and at least one caregiver.

Treatment needs to be fully funded so that anyone who wants it can start right away, and anyone creating a public nuisance or endangering a child can be mandated to get treatment immediately.

This will be expensive, but not nearly as expensive as recriminalization.

I am submitting a public comment to show support for rapidly expanding treatment services in Oregon. As you heard on Monday, the lack of a full continuum of care is a root cause for the problem in our state and people, communities, and families across our state cannot wait any longer.

The situation is urgent and we need action. We need effective solutions that can be done now to bring healing, not harm, to Black and Brown Oregonians, the people harmed the most by the failed war on drugs, as well as rural communities and people experiencing homelessness.

I'm submitting a public comment because I believe our leaders need to do more - and fast - to address the addiction crisis across our state.

We need:

- Housing
- Treatment services of all kinds
- More peer supports
- Street outreach and non-police emergency response to get people connected to care
- No going backwards to recriminalizing addiction and not returning to the harmful war on drugs that disproportionately harmed Black and Brown Oregonians

Recriminalization is a red herring and controversial and divisive proposals to repeal Measure 110 are not the answer. We can't arrest our way out of this. Nothing will change without more and better treatment options.

I urge you to listen to the addiction experts and people with lived experience.

Our communities are counting on you to do the right thing.

Sincerely,

Anne Taliaferro
