

It is unconscionable that freeway expansion is being considered in this day and age of climate emergency! We can't be enabling and promoting another increase in inefficient and polluting car transport, when we need to be deeply discouraging it. Is the government insane? (Or just corrupt?) There are so many needed things to do with infrastructure money that would actually make the world a better place. I don't use cars as a commitment to doing what I can to lessen fossil fuel use and the climate emergency, but it is very difficult to bike safely, or to get public transport, up to Washington, or to other outlying locations. What about increasing and improving public transport & bike lanes? I have European friends and they can't believe how pathetic these options are in Portland (and Portland is supposed to be on the forefront of progressive change in the US!) Let's get with it and start taking the climate crisis seriously – No More Freeway Expansions!
