

Each time I return to our Portland home from visiting Southern California, I reflect that a visit there always includes the ferry ride from San Diego to Coronado on their area's, user friendly ferry system. This last week, I conversed with several other riders on the trip. They had actually heard that PDX had been suggested for such a service and asked if it had finally happened. Well, unfortunately, it hasn't!

Returning home, I see online that a renewed effort is underway; that's the reason I'm writing!!

I really believe that if we had such a transit system that oldsters (like myself!), students, cyclists, TOURISTS, and the general public would use this mode of transportation -- to exhaustion -- not unlike I saw in San Diego.

Please add my name to any list of advocacy for implementation. Portland and OREGON can use a new look and the opportunity to enjoy such a service for convenience and maybe helping to save the environment, too! Thanks!
