BACKGROUND:

Oregon's water right forfeiture laws state that whenever a water right holder fails to use all or part of their appropriated water for a period of five successive years, a "rebuttable presumption of forfeiture" is established (ORS 540.610). The water right holder can challenge that "presumption of forfeiture" and maintain their water right by successfully showing evidence of one or more of fourteen circumstances named in law. One of those circumstances provides that the water right holder was unable to make full beneficial use of the water because water was not available, and the water right holder must show that they were ready, willing, and able to use the water had it been available.

Senate Bill 718 would provide that a year in which the Governor declares that drought exists or is likely to exist within a county does not count toward the five-year water right forfeiture time period.
