HB 3068

Good legislation occurs when the decision-making body strives to determine that which arises out of common opinion. HB 3068 is an example of the sort of outcomes derived from such striving. While the bill makes perfect sense, I imagine there will be those with an interest in the way things stand and perhaps adversely affected by passage. In context of the common good however, I simply cannot imagine a meaningful argument against this bill. It certainly does not make sense to require a 16-year-old individual to “fail” in order to proceed on an alternate path to responsible adulthood.
