

Submitter: Jason Ball
On Behalf Of: Jason Ball
Committee: House Committee On Judiciary
Measure: HB2005

Homebuilt guns are not a significant source of violent crimes - check the data. The root cause of violent crime is not weapons. It's the person behind the weapons - whatever they are. Why are you not asking " WHY are people committing crimes?" instead of trying to ban everything you THINK is involved in them. This is basic root cause problem solving in which no parties seem to want to address. Instead, these special interest groups continue to try to introduce laws that 1. Make it look like they are doing something about a problem, and 2. support a corrupt agenda of self-serving activities aimed at gaining financial support by following party and private investment lines. Those that pose bills aimed at law abiding citizens should be ashamed of their behavior, admit their misguidance and corruption, and get to the business of actually working the root cause of the problem.

There should not be legislature changing a person's right to make and bear arms. I realize that some groups do not feel comfortable with others having the ability and possession of home-built arms, but their beliefs should not erode the rights of others. Those that do not agree with peoples need, want, or ability to own firearms let alone homemade firearms should not have the right to infringe others.

The second amendment should be upheld alongside American ingenuity, freedom, and self expression.