I agree with the bill that is being questioned. I am currently a senior in High School and have gone through the school system in a small community. I strongly believe that our community is already so sheltered. I think that there should be opportunities for students to learn from a young age on what they like and don't like and how it affects their lives. I do agree that the parents should be able to choose what they do and don't want their children learning about in certain aspects of their life but in that same sense if a parent doesn't agree with something they should choose to not have their own child read that book. But should not prohibit the learning for other students and make that decision for another group of parents. People are going to disagree on what their children should be learning at a young age but I feel this is something that the parents should control rather than discriminating from students in a learning environment where they should feel safe and like they belong.
