Measure: HB4130

As an MD who has been very concerned about this issue, I wrote an article entitled "The Death of Compassion" under the name Dr. Joy Love on Medium.com. I have been the target of malfeasance of all kinds since I began speaking up about the dangers of the corporate practice of medicine, especially in recent years. It seems family & friends were recruited to do whatever they could to keep me from standing up for something so important to me, so much so that my life has been & is still in danger because of it.

I recently discovered that my identity was stolen and used to create a fictitious person who committed fraud of various kinds (mail & internet fraud, insurance fraud, social security fraud) and I was somehow convicted as a felon in the state of Washington, all without my knowledge. I have taken steps to report what I know to various agencies, but am still being targeted & my assertions have yet to be proven wrong. The extent of efforts being taken to keep me quiet point to a group or company with very deep pockets & great technical expertise. It would not surprise me if they were some of the very corporations with a large interest in having this bill & others like it defeated. Below my signature here is a review I recently submitted to Amazon; since I am basically accusing them of poisoning me, I'm quite surprised that they allowed it on their site.

Although I pray for a quick resolution to my own persecution for standing up for what I feel is right, I patiently wait for the legislative process to protect the people from corrupt corporations intent on putting profits over people.

"I'm a longtime user of Bentonite clay from several different companies. I chose to order this brand due to it being food grade, good price, & most importantly being packaged in a canister- type container. I use bentonite both externally & internally as it assisted me in recovering from an attempt on my life via poisoning earlier this year, so the secure packaging is of utmost importance to me. This product arrived a day late and was in a plastic bag rather than the canister shown in the product description. I took a photo but this app prevented it from being uploaded. The bag appeared secure, so I assumed that perhaps I had just misunderstood the packaging type somehow and proceeded to mix up the 1 tsp into 2-3 oz of water as I have done many times with other similar products. It did not mix easily into a smooth slurry like other products but instead remained in small clumps. Also, the taste was somewhat different...not bad but just not the same. I was not too concerned that these differences meant there was a problem with it, however a short time after drinking it I began to feel a rush of symptoms similar to what I'd experienced after eating something given to me by a "friend" that turned out to be laced with a toxic substance. Luckily my ER visit resulted in a resolution of my symptoms, but I am now suspicious that this product might have had something to do with my experience. Incidentally, as a retired MD, I am following the progress of HB4130 in the Oregon state legislature, which proposes to close loopholes that currently exist allowing for corporations like insurance companies, private equity firms, & big tech to evade state laws prohibiting the Corporate Practice of Medicine - ie. lay-corporations practicing medicine without a license. Turns out AMAZON IS VERY ACTIVE IN LOBBYING EFFORTS TO OPPOSE THIS BILL. As the attempt on my life previously described was related to me speaking up about this very issue in the past, it would not surprise me at all if my current experiences are just an escalation of efforts to keep voices like mine quiet in the war going on to put profits over people. Please read between the lines here & seriously consider who you can trust to provide products designed for your well-being before ordering from a big tech profit-driven company such as Amazon."
