As a healthcare worker and a patient, I believe it's imperative that we return medical decisions to clinicians and their clients. Non-clinicians should not be dictating how healthcare is practiced! As it is, for example, my own clinicians are allowed to address only one issue during a visit, which is absurd given that symptoms/problems often are related. The focus on time and money vs. patient wellbeing is costing lives, not just for patients, but for clinicians who are burning out and, in too many cases, ending their own lives due, in part, to the loss of professional agency and integrity in their clinical decision-making.
