The last thing we need is more taxes, especially regressive ones that target the largest--and poorest--demographics. We need more responsible spending and fewer pet projects. Charging more money at the pump unfairly targets those of us unable to afford new cars--either EV or otherwise "more economical."

How about auctioning off property--like "roads to nowhere" that only benefit a few people?

I think it's morally wrong to keep trying to erode the things that make Oregon tolerable--like no sales taxes. Yet sales taxes keep appearing, in one form or another. Stop taking money and wasting it. Look at the things you're doing before blindly approving them--and maybe just let some things go! It can be very liberating to do what's right.
