BACKGROUND:

Justice and municipal courts are distinct from the Oregon Judicial Department's unified court system. Justice courts are established by the county in which they are located; municipal courts are established by the city in which they are located. These local courts handle county- and city-specific cases, as well as some state cases.

According to the Secretary of State, Oregon has 32 justice and over 100 municipal courts. These local courts are situated in population centers throughout a county. Many cases in justice and municipal court involve self-represented litigants. In cases that may result in a loss of liberty, a defendant is entitled to a public defender.

Justice courts have jurisdiction within their county, concurrent with the circuit court, in cases involving violations and misdemeanors but not felonies. For example, justice courts have jurisdiction over traffic; boating; wildlife; violations of county codes, ordinances, and other misdemeanors occurring in their county. They also have jurisdiction over certain civil actions where the money or damages claimed do not exceed $10,000, in eviction cases, and a Justice of the Peace may perform weddings.

Municipal courts have concurrent jurisdiction with circuit and justice courts over violations and misdemeanors committed or triable in the city in which the court is located. Municipal courts do not have jurisdiction over felonies or civil actions. They primarily hear cases involving parking and pedestrian violations; traffic violations and misdemeanors; vehicle impoundments and forfeitures; and violations of municipal codes and ordinances. They also hear certain cases involving minor tobacco, liquor, and drug violations. A municipal judge may also perform weddings.

The appeals process for a justice or municipal courts depends on whether that local court is a court of record. The Oregon Court of Appeals can only take appeals from a court of record, which includes circuit courts and local courts that have become a court of record under ORS 51.025 or ORS 221.342. To become a court of record, local courts must meet specified requirements, and the county must file a sworn declaration with the Oregon Supreme Court. A county may only elect to make its justice court a court of record if it is not located within 50 miles of the county's circuit court. Currently, eight (8) municipal courts and no (0) justice courts are courts of record.

When a local court is not a court of record, any appeal must go to the circuit court. The type of local court (justice or municipal) and the type of case (civil, violation, or misdemeanor) also influence how a case is appealed. House Bill 2460 is a product of the Oregon Law Commission, which in close collaboration with a work group, developed this bill to standardize and streamline local courts' appellate processes.
