Let me get this straight. Any county in Oregon may vote not to abide by a state statute that it dislikes. So the rule of law goes down the toilet if a few people somewhere in the state don't like it. This attempt to hamstring a state law, passed with the backing of the majority of voters, makes a mockery of the lawmaking process. It is inherently unlawful. If there are people who don't like a law, they can try to convince the legislature to change it. This attempt to do an "end run" around a law disliked by a tiny minority should be promptly quashed.
