I am in support of using dogs on pushing back these predators back into the woodlands. They're preying on livestock, pets, humans right on our for steps with no fear of guardian animals, human interaction or protective measures people are using. They need to know that they have a territory that is off limits and a territory that is safe for them. Their numbers have been allowed to grow throughout the years and they need to be thinned. Please reconsider the use of hunting dogs to push them back. Ronda White
