This bill and the EO that inspired it is an attempt to fix a problem that isn't there by breaking something that's already working. In other elections, too many potential roadblocks can prevent people from voting, from a lack of ballots to a lack of polling places, to voters only discovering on election day that their name has been stricken from the list of eligible voters. Here in Oregon we've enjoyed the convenience of being able to vote from our own homes, and our voter turnout year over year has shown that. Oregon's Vote-By-Mail infrastructure is be the model the rest of the country should be based on, and it needs to be preserved, not repealed.
