Oregon has had (and continues to have) a free and fair election system for years, and the use of mail-in voting has involved more of the electorate in this important aspect of democracy. There are many people who have difficulty voting in person on election day - not only people who have disabilities or transportation difficulties, but also people for whom taking many hours off work on election day in order to vote is a significant financial hardship. Changing to in-person election day voting will disenfranchise these citizens, and make voting inconvenient for everyone, and there is no reason to change the existing system. It's been proven many times over that the claims of 'massive voter fraud' are themselves fraudulent. If you truly want America to be great, then the importance of allowing the largest number of eligible voters to participate in this democratic process should be obvious!
