I plead that you recognize the importance of making our best effort to restore to as great extent possible, our natural world to what it was prior to the decimation of fur bearing animals. Reasoning for this is readily apparent if you admit the some of the most effective advertising uses pristine wilderness settings for marketing.

I've thought we might accomplish multiple gains by providing portable housing, sanitation and pay for service (similar to enlisted military) in cleaning, maintaining and restoring public lands here and beyond. People engaged could save, acquire personal skills and earn education credit. Possibilities not noted, marginal people might gain societal standing.

Having said that, I hope a balance between a thriving economy and habitat restoration can be attained.

Good health and wealth,

James Moos
