

Submitter: Stacy Davis

On Behalf Of:

Committee: House Committee On Higher Education and Workforce Development

Measure, Appointment or Topic: HB3008

As a teacher, I absolutely love my job, but sometimes, the financial side can be tough. The pay isn't always enough to cover everything, especially when you're managing a household or just trying to make ends meet. But recently, I was fortunate enough to receive a $500 gift that made a huge difference in my life.

This amount might seem small to some, but for someone like me, living paycheck to paycheck, it was a game changer. The money helped me take care of some overdue bills that were weighing on my mind. It also allowed me to buy school supplies for my classroom without worrying about dipping into my personal savings. My students needed those supplies, and it felt amazing to provide for them without the usual stress.

Beyond the practical help, that $500 gave me peace of mind. It alleviated some of the constant financial strain that often feels overwhelming in this profession. I could focus more on teaching and less on stressing about money. It was like a weight had been lifted, and I could breathe again.

Teaching is incredibly rewarding, but it doesn't always come with financial stability. That $500 wasn't just money; it was a reminder that even in times of struggle, small acts of generosity can have a big impact. I'm incredibly grateful for that support, and it motivated me to keep pushing forward with my work, knowing that kindness and help are sometimes just around the corner.