I moved to Oregon 4 years ago, in large part, because of the wildlife and wild places. In the face of climate change and unprecedented federal dysfunction, it's an essential function of our state government to invest in and protect our wild places. There is no future for our communities without the wildlife and natural systems that bring all of us together, and provide the clean air, water, and ecosystem services that our entire economy depends upon, especially our tourism. 1.25% for wildlife represents a mild increase to the transient lodging tax, that can create invaluable benefits to your constituents and the places they live for generations to come.
