I've witnessed first hand how audits only fill the pockets of the insurance companies without actually having any regard for their customers or the people who serve them. The negligence of the insurance company to do their job, keeps the public at risk of losing services due to claw backs when insurers or cco's don't give remediation for the companies of the providers. This directly communicated that the function is solely about their profit and not what they advertise to provide... closing down companies who are trying to serve people who need support for the sake of profit is unethical business practice. The insurers and cco companies should be held to the same ethical standards providers are, since they are able to make medical decisions about the care provided. People over profit.
