Placing the priority of purchaser "convenience" over practical background check completion is myopic in the extreme. Putting bureaucratic foibles in background check processing time over purchase and delivery "rights" speaks to the "need" of the purchaser as precedent, which is dangerous in some circumstances. Why does purchaser "need to take delivery" override the safety concerns of the public when well documented, albeit rare circumstances, of bad actors are well known?

Then, large cap mags are a sticking point? Really?!?! Again, when is "convenience" a valid excuse for avoiding the obvious when keeping those who might wish to create untold havoc at bay. Some law abiding citizens wishing to purchase large cap mags are actually claiming they are justified by the very same "convenience" issue as well? Please don't gaslight those of us who are CCP carriers and recognize that "convenience" of large cap mags extends primarily to the range and those with nefarious intent need to be, again kept at bay.

It's a small sacrifice to outlaw access to early purchase delivery and large cap mags for those of us that prioritize a safe gun owning experience enshrined by purposeful legal constraints.
