Every job position requires accountability. Why would this be an exception? Being anonymous while enforcing laws causes an unbalance of power and is a huge security risk. If there are law enforcement officers that are not correctly doing their job, how would anyone make sure they are held accountable if their identities are unknown? From a safety standpoint, anyone could mask their identity and pose as law enforcement to commit crimes. If officers are trained correctly and following protocols, there shouldn't be a need to hide their ID.
