Our kids desperately need support. Public schools and services need funding for that. Anyone close to the public school system or those in it can see that.

Kids always take and absorb the shortcomings of the adults and systems around them, and they metabolize it for better or worse. When people complain that kicker money is taxpayer money, fine, but what the hell else should taxpayer money go to if it isn't kids?? Especially ones that are hungry, rightfully scared of being torn from their families, unsure how to even dream because all they can see is 2 feet in front of them. Who's taking care of these kids? How do we get them the material and financial support they need? Every politician loves to say kids are our future, but that means shit if nobody is properly funding the systems that feed, educate, and support them now in real time.
