We must do all we can to keep small family farms going so that kids and city-bound adults can experience this rural life. What better way to do that than to visit a farm store, or take part in activities that show off the products of that farm. Most people would choose the chance to buy fresh tomatoes, corn, apples, etc. direct from the farmer rather than the supermarket if they had the opportunity. The small farmers need to have the freedom to adapt their business to stay alive.
