Hello - I have been a resident of Oregon for over 40 years and one of the primary reasons for moving to this state was its natural beauty. I am proud of Oregon for supporting efforts to protect wildlife and their habitats. We as humans must get along with other species that have been here much longer than us. This means helping to protect them from human-caused scenarios as much as possible, especially with the effects of climate change being felt.

I think that is very appropriate to charge tourists a small tax which can be used to protect wildlife and their habitats - after all, like me, many these tourists have come to Oregon because of this natural beauty. This protection is one of Oregon's core values.

It's the least that we can do - thanks - Dave Maize
