In my circle of influence, we've spent time in every corner of Oregon, and I must say that the desert and high country are magical. There are fewer and fewer places left where one may experience the land as unfettered as there - the quiet beauty and relatively undisturbed ecology elicit awe. If it is becoming vulnerable to intrusion and degradation, it must be supported and protected. The appurtenant legislation provides a reasonable means to do so. Let's keep these areas as examples of what makes Oregonians proud!
