my medical experience has shown that non profits spend more time being concerned with profits, as the expense of quality patient care, so our patients are better off with OSHU staying a public hospital/university. Nonprofit status is just a way around paying more in taxes and allowing the leadership to make millions in salaries..... just check out some of the pay levels at some of our other "nonprofit" hospitals, such as Peacehealth. Many VP' making over half million in salary, not including their other "benefits", but doing little to help improve patient care. The CEO's making in excess of one million!
