As a US citizen born and raised in the Pacific Northwest, I have always been proud of our natural resources which provide for recreation as well as appreciation of nature, especially the diversity of wildlife and the opportunity to experience the wonders of viewing a wide variety of animal species in their natural environment.

Over the years my family has traveled to Oregon innumerable times to experience the natural wonders the state has to offer. This experience has enriched my life such that I have become a permanent resident of Oregon as a result.

Preserving wildlife and the environments necessary for it to flourish makes sense for Oregon economically as well as providing similar experiences such as mine for future generations.
